

Minimise Chaos and Overwhelm During Critical Responses

This workshop minimises chaos and overwhelm by ensuring the right people and teams focus on optimal solutions. It equips your teams with the skills to quickly assess any situation and to create an initial action plan to move forward quickly and effectively.

Why it Matters

The first few hours after an incident can be chaotic and unsettling. Your clients, staff and stakeholders expect you to manage any situation effectively.

A 2023 PWC Crisis and Resilience Survey found that 41% of Australian respondents said their most serious incidents disrupted critical business processes or services.

A thorough initial assessment is a crucial first step to help your team define the scope and magnitude of any situation, creating situational awareness and a clear path forward.

This workshop ensures that the right people and teams focus on the best solutions, significantly reducing chaos and overwhelm.

Participants in this workshop will learn, and use my proven six step assessment framework, as well as the practical tools and templates needed to develop an effective initial action plan, making them feel equipped and prepared.

What They Say

Dave strikes that perfect balance of stressing the seriousness of a situation, imparting the why of the response approach and ensuring some light hearted emotional wellbeing is delivered along the way.

K. Knowles
Director of Biodiversity
Department of Conservation, NZ

He not only maintained my interest and attention, but I absolutely enjoyed the extremely informative online workshop and got so much out of it! .

Ngairé Kelaher CPP, PSP
Regional Vice President of 15A for ASIS
International, New Zealand

Totally recommend this if you want to learn more about responding to emergency events.

Nikki Carmichael
Project Manager, Wellington

Dave did a fantastic job bringing emergency preparedness planning and response to the forefront of staff's minds

Leanne Mackay
HR Manager, Imperial Brands

A Unique Perspective

Quickly establishing situational awareness and the ability to create an action plan literally saved my life many times aboard the rescue helicopter.

I first learned these skills as a volunteer firefighter in New York City and went on to use them thousands of times in my rescue helicopter career, during my time on the New Zealand National COVID-19 Outbreak Response team and as a bystander during an emergency situation.

My Size-Up Framework has only six questions and allows your assessment team to quickly and accurately assess any situation. The framework then leads to the development of an initial action plan, which gives your teams the ability to take effective action.

Whether in a rescue helicopter hundreds of kilometres out to sea or in a conference room being used to manage a crisis, good situational awareness and planning are essential to ensuring the best possible outcomes.

BOOK DAVE

 +64-29-233-8284

 dave@davegreenberg.co

